How do I use Project-Based Learning (PBL) in my course?

When an instructor uses Project-based Learning (PBL), students are presented with ill-structured challenges or activities to which there is no single answer. This kind of learning encourages engagement, since it is student-centered and collaborative and since it includes a real-world context. Instructors shift into the role of facilitator, and PBL is usually self-directed learning.

- Gold Standard PBL: Essential Project Design Elements
- PBL resources for teachers
- Project-based learning research review

CLT Workshops:

CLT offers faculty development workshops, seminars, and brown-bag discussions on Project-based Learning and other teaching methods. Visit the CLT Events calendar to register:

- [CLT Events calendar](CLT Events calendar)
- [CLT Workshops](CLT Workshops)

You may also request an on-demand workshop by contacting CLT.

CLT Instructional Design:

CLT offers instructional design services, including consultations on incorporating teaching strategies like project-based learning into curricula. Contact CLT to learn more.

- [Contact CLT](Contact CLT)

Unique solution ID: #1047
Author: Center for Learning and Teaching
Last update: 2016-06-24 23:09